Furthering her education in the arts, she attended Pratt Institute in Brooklyn, N.Y., where she received her master of fine arts degree in interior design.

She lived and worked in Southern California most of her adult life, focusing on her graphic design and signage skills. Cheryl's outstanding work was commissioned by Aramaki Design, Energy First Credit Union, The Southern California Gas Co. and the 1984 Summer Olympics. She was a member of the Loveland Business Women's Network, Loveland Leads Club and other Leads Clubs along the Front Range. Throughout her career, she held membership in both architectural and interior design professional organizations.
